

Exhumations

For most people, involvement in a project that requires the multiple exhumations of human remains will be an entirely new experience.

It is most unlikely that they will have prior knowledge of what will be necessary to effect the removal of human remains lawfully and practically.

Even professional advisors, such as local Authority Officers, Architects, Surveyors and Quantity surveyors, need informed advice at the preliminary planning stage to enable contractual specifications to be prepared, that will reflect the most cost effective format for this work.

Roseleigh Funeral Home Managing Director and staff have many years experience in the exhumation of human remains throughout South Africa.

The Company exists to provide those involved in the exhumation of human remains with comprehensive service including essential advice that will reduce the costs of what is, inevitably, an expensive and labour intensive procedure.

Roseleigh Funeral Home covers every aspect of this often complex and emotive subject – from the legal and ecclesiastical requirements and budget costing, to the site clearance itself and the final dispositioning.

With experience of exhuming numerous human remains, Roseleigh Funeral Home strives to become South Africa's leading authority on mass exhumation of human remains and also to become the premier South African exhumation specialist.

All enquiries are dealt with by us immediately and with complete confidentiality.

It is important to remember that the decisions which are taken immediately exhumation is considered will be reflected in the final cost. It is therefore, imperative that advice is obtained at the earliest opportunity.

Initial site evaluation and advice is provided without charge and with no obligation to prospective clients.
